CANCER FUND APPEAL

Through Memorial Gifts to the Cancer Fund, many people are establishing a living memorial to friends and loved ones. When memorial gifts are made to the Cancer Fund, the donor is helping to open new doors to better ways of coping with the disease.

Mrs. Frank Chuchek, Chairman of the Appomattox County Crusade Fund, reports that there were around 15 memorial gifts made during the year 1961. This year, only one memorial gift has been made.

Every memorial gift, whether large or small, gives material aid to cancer research programs and will help to boost the Cancer Fund in this County. The Cancer Fund goal of $1200.00 has not been reached and Cancer Crusade workers urge that donations and memorial gifts be turned in to Mrs. Mary S. Hudson, Treasurer, Appomattox Va. Memorial gifts can be made at any time during the year.

Investment for Growth

Industrialist Asks Aid for American • Worker's Fight for Economic Life

Americans are not successfully meeting world competition in very many places, a Pittsburgh industrialist, E. J. Hanley, declared in a recent speech before the Economic Club of Detroit. Hanley, president of Allegheny Ludlum Steel Corp., pointed to effects of short-sighted, modernization-killing tax laws as "the biggest single deterrent to modernization of the American industrial plant."

Sixty-two years ago, American locomotives, running on American rails, whistled past the Pyramids and across the long Siberian steppes, Hanley recalled. They carried Hindoo pilgrims from all parts of their empire to the sacred waters of the Ganges. We were successful then in meeting competition everywhere. Quoting a treasury official of the day, Hanley said America sent coal to Newcastle, cotton to Manchester, cutlery to Sheffield, potatoes to Ireland, champagne to France and Rhine Wine to Germany.

In contrast, today all Americans seek a way to meet world competition raising the question of newer, modern machinery.

"Our foreign friends in steel average newer machinery than we do, largely because it has been necessarily built new from the ground up, due to war destruction and the Russians carrying it off bodily," he said.

E. J. Hanley

50-CENT DOLLARS

Charging that the short-sighted, modernization-killing tax laws of the United States have proved to be the biggest single deterrent to the modernization of the American industrial plant, Hanley said they must be changed. We have the most restrictive rules of any industrialized country, he continued, and consequently find ourselves replacing 1945-50 equipment with the 50-cent dollars of 1962.

Finding it necessary to obtain new capital to replace losses in our capital structure, he cited the alternative as letting the modernization of plants and equipment, so badly needed in the competitive battle, await a "better year."

With an estimated 100 billion dollars worth of industrial plant and equipment obsolete now, another 60 billion dollars worth will become obsolete by 1970, according to Hanley.

Foreign competitors are installing new plants and equipment at unbelievable speed, observers report, as they beat us at our own game of cost reduction. A recent study of Dr. Simon Kuznets, carefully documents the effects of past high-level Federal budgets on our economy's capital accumulation. In brief, the study showed that in recent years national economic growth in the U. S. has been stunted — not by any shortage of investment opportunities — but by a shortage of savings available for investment. Income and savings declined relative to national product, largely because of rising tax rates.

MUST REDUCE COSTS

The largest single element in cost of most products today is labor. To obtain low cost, Hanley said modern plants and highly productive labor must combine to reduce high hourly employment costs. These high hourly costs require the use of every bit of ingenuity we can muster to change methods, designs, and equipment to help workers increase their productivity. Besides, the individual workman must get to understand he is truly in competition. We must rekindle in him the same "intense desire" to do a job that our foreign friends show in their work.

"These matters — modernization of plant, freeing of funds to encourage investment, lower labor costs — are of importance to every person in this country," Hanley stated. Besides being part and parcel of our ability to meet foreign competition within our borders, they are, fundamental to selling our own products in foreign markets, an absolute necessity in maintaining the integrity of the Dollar.

Steady seepage of our gold reserves, which amounted to 2½ million dollars a day in 1961, won't let us easily forget need for discipline, Hanley declared.

He pointed to the fallacy of the theory that advances in productivity should be passed on to the few, in higher labor costs, rather than to the many, through lower prices. Lower prices would pass the advantage, not only to those in manufacturing, but to those in agriculture, the service industries and in the professions. In addition, to passing of advantages of productivity to just a few, the productivity wage increase idea opens flood gates and undoes the objective of lowering cost — so essential to our nation's success in the world markets.

The most secure workman works for the company with the lowest costs and, therefore, with the highest profit in an industry, Hanley concluded.
